the Short Cut

"WELL," said Howie Langston, "they've finally set a date for the county fair."

"And this year they're gonna have a formal on the last Saturday night of the fair!" added Ed Baxter.

"Say, Ed, look at our bosom friend and companion, the honorable Bill Stanton!" exclaimed Howie.

Bill sat leaning on the table, and wore a very dejected look.

"What gives, Bill? What's your trouble?" asked Ed.

"Fellows, my trouble is a very old and familiar one," Bill answered sadly.

"You mean you're broke!" said Howie.

"I'm as flat as the top of your head, Pal," replied Bill.

At that moment, Bill's ready steady walked into the Varsity. She saw the three boys seated together and joined them.

"Hi, you fearsome threesome. What's new in your little worlds?" Didi slid into the booth and surveyed the group. She turned to Bill. "I'd like a soda, Bill. Okay?"

Bill took a nickel out of his pocket, looked at it tenderly for a minute, and got up. "I'll get you one in a minute, Didi."

"Either one of you know what's weighing down his soul?" she asked.

"I think you oughta know, Didi, that Bill's worried about the fair and the dance," said Ed.

"Worried about the fair and the dance? I don't get it."

"He's flat broke," Howie said determinedly.

"Oh—he is. What about his allowance?" she asked.

"I imagine that it's been spent a month in advance. And you know how his father feels about that."

"It's bad enough that I know how my father feels about it."

"Don't say anything. Here he comes!" warned Didi.

"Not that I don't love you two guys, but would you mind beating a graceful exit. I want to have a heart-to-heart with the lug," pleaded Didi.

As Bill approached the booth, the two boys stood up and said, "So long."

"Bill," Didi sternly asked, "how much money have you got?"

"HUH??" exclaimed Bill.

"You heard me!"

"Well . . . er . . . I . . ."

"How much?"

"All told, I have 50 cents. And that my mother gave me to get a haircut," stammered Bill.

"Let me think for a few minutes, Bill. I'm sure I can get your father and mother to advance you some money. We'll get to that fair yet."

"How did you . . ."

"Now, Bill. I just know. I'm sure I can figure a way out. With my brains and your . . . well . . . anyway, with my brains, this business will be strictly settled," Didi said confidently.

She sipped her soda and looked thoughtful. Bill watched her sip and looked thirsty.

"Of course. It's simple," she smiled.

"Let me in on it, Didi!" said Bill.

"As soon as your father gets home, you and I are going to see him. If we can show your father that you can get a haircut and still keep the 50 cents, he has to advance you a month's allowance. He may protest, but I'll talk him into it. I've done it before, and I can do it again."

"All strictly solid. But HOW do I get the haircut?" queried Bill.

"I'll cut your hair myself," answered Didi.

"You'll cut my hair your————WHAT!!" shouted Bill. "Oh, no. Even the barber manages to mess me up. It'd be suicide. It'd be . . . why, it's murder!"

"Okay. I'll tell Johnny Stevens that I'd love to go to the fair with him." Didi started to leave the booth.

"All right, all right, you win. And you're probably not surprised," sighed Bill.

That evening, a very astonished Mr. and Mrs. Stanton heard the fantastic proposition offered by Didi. They both were intent upon protesting very strongly. But although their intentions were strong, Didi's were stronger. Before they realized what was happening, they both had agreed to giving Bill enough money for fair week, provided he got a haircut without borrowing any money, or charging it at the barber shop.

The next day Bill arrived at Didi's house looking a bit worried. Didi was bright and cheerful when she answered the doorbell.

"All ready, Bill?" she asked.

"I could say, 'what have I got to lose,'—but that would be untruthful," the unhappy Bill answered.

"Now, if you're going to wisecrack and feel sorry for yourself after all the trouble I've gone to, we might just as well call it quits right now," Didi said angrily.

"Okay, you can lead me to the . . . uh . . . chair," Bill replied.

Didi looked up suspiciously, but Bill's face wore an innocent, angelic expression.

"I thought we'd go down to the basement. There's an old antique barber's chair down there."

"And you could easily dispose of the body," mumbled Bill.

"What'd you say?" asked Didi.

"Just thinking out loud!"

"I suppose that's so rare you do have to do it out loud to prove that you can," Didi said smugly.

"Let's start," said Bill, who was thoroughly squelched.

Down in the basement, Bill climbed cautiously into the rickety old chair. "This doesn't look very strong," he said worriedly.

"I tested it before you came. It'll hold you." Didi threw an old sheet around Bill's neck.

"That'll catch anything you might cut off very nicely," said Bill rubbing his ears.

"BILL!"

"Sorry!"

Didi picked up a pair of shears from a table.

"What . . . are you going to do with those?" Bill said, pointing to the over-sized pair of shears Didi held in her hand.

"Just because the blades are jagged doesn't mean you won't get a nice haircut. I couldn't find any other shears, and I know mother just had these sharpened. She's going to trim the seams on my formal with them." Didi had no doubts as to the efficiency of the pinking shears.

"Now hold still!" she grasped the back of Bill's neck to get a firm grip. "How do you want it?"

"I'd like it to remain on my shoulders," said Bill, trying to get his neck out of Didi's grasp.

"Don't struggle! You might get hurt."

"I MIGHT get hurt. As long as you have doubts, then I can still hope," said Bill.

Didi cut a portion of the front hair off. It made Bill look as if he had just seen some horrible sights and his hair were standing on end.

"Mmmm. I guess I'll have to make this a close haircut," Didi said thoughtfully.

"Didi! I'll make money for the fair. I'll shovel snow. I'll . . ." Bill was almost in tears.

"Need I remind you that we are in the month of June. And in this part of the country, it doesn't snow in June." Didi grasped Bill's squirming head and removed some hair near his right ear. She obviously was in a hurry, because she quickly flipped up the shears to cut the rest off. But the shears had a mind of their own. Part of Bill's left eyebrow was removed from sight.

"You look quite interesting that way, Bill," Didi said.

"I beg you to stop. If you care anything for me, you'll stop cutting me to pieces!" begged Bill.

"Why, Bill. I believe you're not very grateful to me for what I've done to you," Didi said angrily.

She put the shears down on the table with a thump. The thump did it. The antique barber's chair splintered apart with a mighty groan and crashed to the floor.

"Bill!" screamed Didi. "Speak to me!"

Bill lay on the floor and moaned. "Oh, my leg."

The next few hours produced a few surprises. Evidently there was life in the old chair yet. Bill received one broken leg and various minor bumps and bruises.

Didi was indignant that Mr. and Mrs. Stanton insisted that all doctor's bills were to come out of Bill's allowance.

Bill's comment? "I'm through with women," and "if long hair is good enough for Tarzan—why—oh WHY didn't she think it would be good enough for me????"

What's more, GLAMA NAIL grows together with your regular nail like one. You can cut, clip, file and apply polish—and it makes nails so wonderfully strong, they won't break or tear. Imagine—so strong it can't break or tear even washing dishes in hot soapy water, cleaning house, doing laundry, playing piano, typing. And these nails are so sturdy, nail biters can't chew them or bite them off. Colored nail polish stays on your GLAMA NAIL longer and nail polish remover takes polish off quicker and easier. You'll be thrilled with results you never imagined possible.

Place GLAMA NAIL form under BROKEN OR SHORT NAIL
